

ACTnow's Note

"It happened too fast, I have no idea where all this water came from, but within 30 minutes or so, everything had been submerged. Then, in just over two minutes, all the water was gone,"

Hana, an insurance agent

"I feel things will get worse because Sungai Klang has almost reached its capacity, I think I might as well sit on coconut leaves"

Asmawi Amin, a father of six

Reported on 9 March 2022, The Kuala Lumpur City Hall (DBKL) has appointed a consultant to study and redesign the city's drains to improve their ability to accommodate increased rain water and prevent flash floods.

ACTnow hopes that those affected with the recent flood stay positive throughout these tough times. At the same time, hopefully the government takes rapid action on resolving these issues. It is already tough with the ongoing pandemic, with some families emptying their saving to survive, the government needs to make sure that they are doing their very best to prevent any more devastating incidents from happening again.
